- Globally, 2023 was characterized by persistent inflationary pressures, high interest rates, geopolitical tensions including the Russia-Ukraine conflict, the China –US trade disagreements and the attacks on ships in the Red Sea disrupting supply chains.
- Despite these challenges, the global economy performed on the upside with global growth estimated at 3.1% from a forecast of 2.8% in April 2023.
- In 2024, the biggest global election year in history with elections in over 50 countries, the global economy is projected to remain largely resilient with growth mirroring 2023 at 3.1%.
- This will largely be supported by the expected cautious monetary policy easing as inflation continue to moderate, fiscal support especially in China and the US and the generally improving sentiments.
- However, supply chain disruptions in the Red Sea, continued weakness in the Chinese property sector, stagnation in the Euro area & the continued feedthrough of the tight policy stance in 2023 are expected to weigh down overall economic activities.

- Domestically, 2023 was characterized by weak demand because of high inflation, high interest rates, significant depreciation of the Kenyan shilling, increased taxation and deteriorating asset quality on a weak macro environment.
- Headline growth remained strong despite these challenges growing by 5.6% in the first three quarters of 2023.
- Growth was largely supported by recovery in the agricultural sector, public sector spending and resilience in the services sector.
- In 2024, high frequency data on the Kenyan economy remains positive for activity. Purchasing Manager's Index data for February 2024 indicates expansion in private sector activity especially within the agriculture, manufacturing and the services spaces with noted weaknesses in construction & wholesale and retail activities.
- Stability in foreign exchange market is seen reducing overall headline inflation thus supporting demand in 2024.
- Key concerns remains around persistent fiscal constraints, pressure in the FX market and the tight monetary policy affecting credit growth and asset quality.

Inflation Trending downwards, Projected Firmly Within CBK Target Band

- Inflation to continue trending downwards in 2024 on account of strong base effects, stability in the foreign exchange market & stable global commodities market including the oil market.

- With stability in the FX market and inflation trending downwards, it appears we are approaching the peak in interest rates.
- The improved external inflows are reducing the reliance/pressure on domestic financing with yields expected to turn in 2H 2024.

Improved external flows & successful Eurobond buyback in February 2024 has resulted in positive sentiments for Kenya, reduced demand for foreign currency debt repayments & giving room for smoothening volatilities in the FX market.

Rates appear to have peaked in most markets, projected rate cuts in 2H 2024 in advanced markets expected to drive risk-on position for frontier markets.
