Review of the Macro Economic Environment

Macro Economic Review 9M 2020

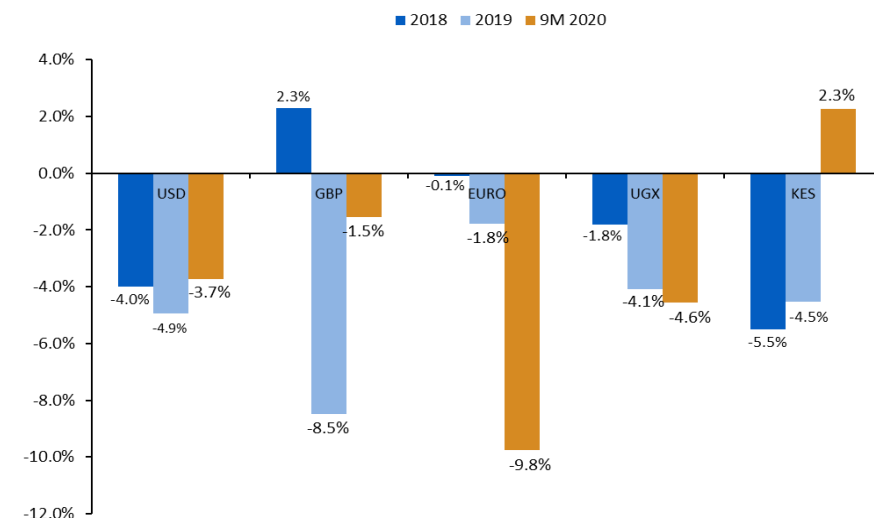

- According to October 2020 IMF projections, global economic growth is projected at -4.4% in 2020, a less severe contraction compared to June forecasts. The revision was mainly due to the resumption of economic activities in May and June, though the second wave of the pandemic is compelling countries to opt for another lockdown.
- Following COVID-19 induced shutdown, real GDP decreased by 12.4% in Q2 2020. However, high-frequency indicators point to an improvement in Q3 2020. The Composite Index of Economic Activities (CIEA), a measure that provides an early indication of economic performance, increased by 6.3% in Q3 2020 compared to a contraction of 9.1 recorded in Q2 2020.
- Similarly, total turnovers of industry and services sectors improved, but still below last year's levels.
- The industry sector turnovers for Q3 2020 grew in line with the increased government demand for construction materials to build schools, roads and health facilities.
- Though COVID-19 related risks continue to weigh in on the performance of the services sector, the contraction in the sector's turnovers eased in Q3 2020, after a deeper decline recorded in the previous quarter.
